FRIDAY, OCTOBER 25, 1889.

HOPKINSVILLE, KENTUCKY.

A fire and growing city of 10,000 inhabitants, situated in a county of 40,000. The Louisville and Nashville has two lines of railroad in the county. The latest tobacco growing county in the world. Wheat, corn, hay, coal, live stock and fruits produced for export in large quantities. The city has four banks with an aggregate capital of $1,000,000. A planing mill and wagon factory, three carriage factories, lime factory, tobacco manufactory, two foundries, three brick yards, broom factory, steam laundry, five saloons, twenty-two flouring mills in the city and several in the county, splendid driving park and fine opera house. Five saloons in the city. Hopkinsville, Building and Loan Association, Commercial Club, telephone exchange, saloons, streets and houses and city lighted by gas. Macadamized streets and brick sidewalks all over the city. Eleven churches, two colleges a high school and the finest system of public schools, white and colored, in the State. Western Kentucky Lunatic Asylum with a population of 100, two miles east of the city. A $100,000 court house with tower clock in the center. A fine fire department and a company of State Guards. Little River furnishes an adequate supply of water for all purposes. Real estate low and rents cheap. Fine opening for woolen mill, port packing establishment, fruit canning, tannery and many other enterprises. Climate mild and invigorating and exceedingly healthful.

The Prohibitionists have again carried Webster county by a large majority.

Col. Nick Smith, New York's professional male beauty, has been appointed consul at Three Rivers, Canada. If personal pulchritude is to be considered a qualification with this administration, some of us who are Democrats may have a chance to decline proffered honors.

The 54th annual session of the Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows met in Louisville Tuesday with the largest attendance on record. The order now has 150 lodges and 7,700 members in Kentucky. Grand Master T. F. Rogers presided.

The first day was occupied by the Christian Women's Board of Missions, of which Mrs. P. H. Johnson, of Indianapolis, is president. The meeting is largely attended by representatives from all parts of the Union.

CRASH ON A CURVE.

Disastrous Accident on the Louisville and Nashville Railroad.

An appalling accident happened on the Louisville and Nashville railroad about 10:05 o'clock Tuesday morning, at North Station, 53 miles south of Louisville on the Nashville line.

By a disastrous blunder, the blame of which has not yet been placed on any responsible person, the through mail train from New Orleans and the South, was permitted to run into the Bowling Green accommodation, bound for Louisville, and in the awful shock that followed, twenty-one persons, men, women and children, were injured, one so badly that death is reported to have resulted several hours later, and the others painfully, the damage to these ranging from broken limbs and lacerated flesh to bruises and sprains.

LIST OF THE INJURED.

A complete list of those who were injured seriously enough to require attention is as follows:

Yandye Hoyer, Millersburg, Ky., crushed about the sacrum, and fatally injured internally. Reported to have died Tuesday night.

Ror. J. M. Bruce, Glasgow, Ky., arm broken, spine sprained, and severe bruises.

J. M. Jones, Glasgow, Ky., spine injured and arm sprained and bruised.

W. F. Rogers, Horse Cave, Ky., shoulder fractured.

William Shalcross, engineer mail train, slightly bruised, not seriously hurt.

J. W. Royalty, Horse Cave, Ky., hips and head badly bruised.

J. M. Wheeler, Washington, Ky., left arm and wrist fractured, severe scalp wounds, and side hurt.

Mrs. George R. Smith, Glasgow, Ky., ankle sprained.

Mrs. C. A. Green, Mitchellburg, Ky., arm and shoulder bruised.

J. B. Cook, Horse Cave, Ky., leg injured.

Charles King, fireman of mail train, arm badly sprained, head cut, and hip hurt.

William Crow, Elizabethtown, Ky., leg and head bruised.

Ell Ogle, Louisville, boards No. 721 Seventh street, knee and back wrenched and bruised.

R. D. Hall, chief clerk in postal-car, mail train, slightly bruised.

E. L. Jeffries, Horse Cave, Ky., face and knee hurt.

Three young children of E. L. Jeffries, each bruised and cut more or less about the head.

John Kinslow, Pig post-office, via Rocky Hill, Ky., head bruised slightly.

George H. Scott, Hays, Ky., cut and bruised slightly.

R. D. Stone, Bristol, Ky., back hurt, other bruises slight.

In addition to these, a half dozen or more persons received slight bruises, but these were too much pleased with having escaped with their lives to complain. With but three exceptions, all the injured persons were passengers on the accommodation train. Those on the mail train were Charles King, fireman; R. D. Hall, postal clerk, and Mr. Ell Ogle.

A YOUNG HERO.

Among the passengers on the rear coach, was Yandye Hoyer, a smooth-faced, sturdy boy, eighteen years old, whose good humor and pleasant manners had attracted the attention of his fellow-travelers earlier in the day. In his youthful career he had told, without reserve, his hopes and prospects. He had just left home, and with a small sum of money and letters of recommendation to men who, he thought, would furnish him employment, he was coming to Louisville.

When the mail train made its frightful appearance, and all began to flee, Hoyer rose and ran towards the coach door. He was almost out on the platform and in a second more would have been safe, when a frightened woman reached his side near falling with terror. She would have fallen but for Hoyer, who, seeing her condition and nobly came to her rescue. Supporting her with one arm, he stepped to one side and assisted her to pass him, gently forcing her to the platform. Before he could follow her the mail train crashed into the accommodation, the heroic boy was caught in the shattered ruins and fatally injured. A few moments later he was dragged out from the dust and smoke of the wrecked coach, torn and lacerated by splinters, and with his body about the hips so badly crushed that there was never a doubt but that his death was only a few hours off.

By a strange coincidence the uncle of the brave youth was a passenger on the same train, but did not know of the lad's presence until after the accident. This uncle was J. M. Wheeler, of Washington, who was also very badly injured.—Courier-Journal.

Several parties from this city were on the ill-fated train, among them Mr. B. S. Campbell, Mr. E. B. Long, Mrs. Cornelia Wallace, Mrs. A. W. Wishard, Miss Foss Guynn and others.

THE CRAFT.

The Record, published by Johnson & Pryor, has appeared at Paris.

The young men of the state press are having an elevated antiquated time at Bowling Green this week. There are some very bright young men on the papers of Kentucky and the kids, if they will, can make this an occasion productive of benefit to the participants; but from the fact that the ball is to be the biggest feat of the meeting, we are apt to infer that the boys are off on a frolic.

Edwin C. Colgan, editor of the Middleborough Cumberland Gap, died at Louisville Monday in the 47th year of his age. He contracted pneumonia by exposure during the land sales at Middleborough last week. His family, consisting of a wife and two children, still live in Louisville, in which city Mr. Colgan had lived for a number of years before moving to the new town in Bell county. Deceased was one of "Morgan's men" in the civil war and was a gallant soldier. He is credited with the authorship of the widely-read doggerel:

The jangling has a gaudy wing,
The lightning bug has flame,
The heding has no friends at all,
But he gets there all the same.

W. S. Sterrett has sold to J. J. Early, of the Hawesville News-World, the Kentucky Colonist, at Whitesville. The transfer included outfit, stock and subscription list and the purchaser took immediate charge. What Mr. Early will do with the paper is not known, but it is thought he will continue the publication of it at Whitesville. Mr. Sterrett says he has already arranged to go to Washington to take a position on the Capital newspaper, and to correspond for several papers in this and other states.—Owensboro Inquirer.

The Coal Output.

Mr. C. J. Norwood, State Inspector of Mines, furnishes the following condensed statement, in advance of his forthcoming report of the output of the commercial coal mines for the six months ending June 30, 1889:

District.	Bushels.
Western.....	13,240,520
Northeastern.....	5,061,021
Southeastern.....	7,267,892
Total for six months.....	25,569,433

Of the eighty-four mines reported, seventy-five are on railroads, their total output amounting to 25,285,746 bushels. All the mines reported in the Northeastern and Southeastern Districts are on railroads. The output of the railroad mines in the Western District amounted to 12,856,863 bushels.

Compared with those for the preceding six months, the figures show a reduction of the output amounting to 4,905,546 bushels, although fourteen more mines are represented; compared with those for the six months ending June 30, 1888, they show a decrease amounting to 3,007,051 bushels, while eighteen more mines are represented.

The output of both the Western and Northeastern Districts fell below that of either half of 1888; but that of the Northeastern was increased—the excess over the production for the preceding six months amounting to 222,998 bushels, and to 438,420 bushels over the output for the six months ending June 30, 1888.

A Prompt Decision.

He entered a store on Michigan avenue the other day, walked straight up to the proprietor, and in a voice chuck-full of business he queried:

"Can you give me fifteen minutes of your time, sir?"

"No, sir," was the reply.

"Can you spare ten minutes to investigate the merits of my flying-machine?"

"I can not."

"Will you give me five minutes in which to convince you that you ought to subscribe for ten shares of my stock?"

"No, sir."

"Good-day. I like a man of business. I say."—Detroit Free Press.

STYLES FOR AUTUMN.

Robes that will soon supplant Gossamer and Laces.

The first wools imported for autumn wear are light-weight camels-hair and cashmeres. These goods are to be found in dull, rich new colors like dark olive, or in the shades of the greens of last season, ranging in blue, serpentine hues, and in the gray-green rose colors and in yellow greens like mosses. Cotton color, called this season "cotton" from the plumage of the hideous South American bird, is shown in several shades, ranging from a pale tint almost as light as ecrus to the deepest metallic copper hue. Rust-red colors are imported this year as Vandyke red and are especially beautiful in velvet and rich goods like those used in the famous portraits of the Emperors of Austria.

The most noteworthy feature of the new materials and styles is the tendency shown everywhere to elongated, lengthwise effects. The prevailing styles thus far exhibited are a simplification of the directions, omitting its elaborate huge revers, cravats, wing-like side pieces, and its exaggerating the severity of its general cut. The fullness of the shoulder is retained in the sleeve, but otherwise most of the sleeves for walking-dresses are plain cut-sleeves, moderately close. The leg-of-mutton and other full sleeves will, however, continue to be popular for morning or negligee wear and for home dresses and dinner costumes. Panel effects of different kinds are a leading feature of nearly all designs. Smart effects also promise to be popular and for this purpose importers recommend the "cottons" given. This is a plain gown made with smooth bodice. A scarf of figured goods about eighteen inches wide is then put around the neck, shirred in place at the shoulder seams and draped over the front of the bodice on either side, held close at the waistline in clusters of shirring and left to fall plainly on either side to the foot of the skirt. Handkerchiefs effects in gowns, which were so popular several years ago, are revived this season for simple dresses, which are made with blouses and overlapping, short pointed apron drapery over a plain skirt, which is bordered on the edge with the handkerchief border and made so as to form a hollow box-plait in the center of the front, breadth, up either side of which the border extends.

Contrasts of two colors are no longer considered elegant in wool, and there are only a few dresses imported with trimmings of the same tone of color. Black velvet is considered the most elegant contrast with all colors, whether brown, blue, or red shades. Nearly all the panels shown for combination with plain wools of various hues are made up of black velvet, striped or brocade on a shirring or a gray-grained background in a huge stripe, varying from twelve to eighteen inches in width, set in a wool ground harmonizing with the wool it is used with. Thus a dark Vandyke red camel-hair is made up with a wide panel on the left side, composed merely of a succession of lines of black velvet of widths varying from a mere line to a stripe eight inches wide on a red sunsh background set into wool. These panels are occasionally imported in a medley of colors in old German tapestry cross-stitch patterns of birds and flowers.—Chicago Times.

THE STUART FAMILY.

Wherein the Members Differed from the Stuart Tutors.

The royal house of Stuart were an exceedingly disreputable set of people, but in their lives and their persons they were, with all their crimes and their vices, essentially sympathetic. The life and work of Mary, Queen of Scots, is one long poem, over-bridged with the deepest pathos. Romance of the mournful, but of the most fascinating kind, envisions the careers of Charles I. and of the old and young Pretenders. Charles II., queen of Scots, has not lost his sense of mental hold on the affections of the English people. To them he is still the "merry monarch," who, on his death-bed, murmured to his brother: "Let not poor Nelly starve." Pity and sympathy can even be felt for James II. himself, betrayed and banished and laughing into extinction at St. Germain. These feelings of sentiment went very far indeed toward making the triumph of the Stuart exhibition. There are still—in a sentimental sense, of course—ardent partisans of Mary, Queen of Scots, and of the young cavalier. Jacobites abound in the very best society; but it is questionable whether there yet linger any political adherents of Henry VIII. or Queen Elizabeth. The materials for a Tudor exhibition are amazingly copious and rich, but the display of the Tudor exhibition is a public recognition less an abstract and brief chronicle of the Tudor monarchs than as the reproduction of a splendidly picturesque and artistic epoch. One most important step toward the consummation will be made, as the committee have been endeavoring to bring together by a special endeavor to bring together as complete a series as possible of the works of the illustrious artist, Hans Holbein, court painter to Henry VIII., who, at least, knew how to imitate the genius of the great master.

"Look you here," said the Tudor King of our brightly noble and accomplished painter, "the painter had been rude to him: 'Out of seven plowmen I can make seven lords, but out of seven lords I can not make one Holbein.'—London Telegraph.
